❖ Have things moved even slower than usual when you've been surfing the internet recently? Has your computer crashed more often? Have those pop-up ads begun to appear ever more frequently? Just the way the web is, you may think. But there could be another reason for the chaos you're experiencing. You may have downloaded software that is secretly taking advantage of your computer power and personal information. Somewhere on your computer, a program may be operating, carefully keeping the record of what you do online, then sending that information to a marketing company, who may sell it on, or use it to send you ads while you surf. Without your knowledge, you may have let a piece of "spy ware" into your life.
